

BL

Brandline — Content Strategy Report

A ready-to-post content plan crafted from your brief

LinkedIn

July 10, 2026 · 12:28 AM

1 CONTENT BRIEF — YOUR INPUTS

NICHE / INDUSTRY

UX design for early-career product designers

PLATFORM

LinkedIn

CONTENT GOAL

Build authority

tone of voice

Confident & expert

TARGET AUDIENCE

Junior-to-mid product designers, 23-30, navigating their first design job

2 TOPIC / RAW IDEA — AS ENTERED

"For my first two years as a designer I thought a polished Figma file was the job. It wasn't until a redesign I shipped got quietly reverted post-launch that I realized the real job is defending decisions with reasoning, not pixels."

3 STRATEGIC ANGLE

Position this as an insider lesson from inside UX design for early-career product designers — the goal is to make Junior-to-mid product designers, 23-30, navigating their first design job feel like they're getting something they can't get from a generic search. This fits "Build authority" because specific, lived experience is what earns attention and trust in a crowded feed.

4 HOOKS

- 1 I used to think [common belief in UX design for early-career product designers] — then for my first two years as a designer I thought a polished Figma file was the job. changed my mind.
- 2 Unpopular opinion in UX design for early-career product designers: most advice about this is backwards.
- 3 Here's what nobody tells you about for my first two years as a designer I thought a polished Figma file was the job..

5 READY-TO-POST DRAFT

[POST DRAFT]

I used to think [common belief in UX design for early-career product designers] — then for my first two years as a designer I thought a polished Figma file was the job. changed my mind.

For my first two years as a designer I thought a polished Figma file was the job.

[Personalize this line with your specific experience, numbers, or example — don't leave it generic.]

[Add one concrete detail: what changed, what you tried, or what surprised you.]

What's your experience with this? I'd genuinely like to know how Junior-to-mid product designers, 23-30, navigating their first design job see it.

6 WHY THIS WORKS

- Uses a declarative, no-hedging voice that signals authority without sounding arrogant, matching your selected tone of voice.
- The opening hook is built for LinkedIn's attention pattern — the first line has to earn the rest of the read.
- Strategically supports "Build authority" by demonstrating first-hand expertise rather than repeating generic advice, which is what actually earns trust.
- Speaks directly to Junior-to-mid product designers, 23-30, navigating their first design job instead of a generic audience, which increases relevance and relatability.

7 NEXT STEPS

- ✓ Turn the "why this works" reasoning into a follow-up post — teaching the strategy behind your content builds authority on its own.
- ✓ Repurpose this into a shorter format for a second platform (e.g. a thread or short-form video) within the week.
- ✓ Track which line got the most replies or saves, and reuse that exact structure in your next post about ux design for early-career product designers.

